PROVIDING A USER INPUT INTERFACE PRIOR TO INITIATION OF AN OPERATING SYSTEM

Abstract of the Disclosure

A processor-based system, including systems without keyboards, may receive user inputs prior to booting. This may done using the graphics controller to generate a window which allows the user to input information. The system firmware may then compare any user inputs, such as passwords, and may determine whether or not to actually initiate system booting.